AMERICA, ISOLATED, WEAKENED TREATY, COL. HOUSE'S VIEW

"To Administer Pact in Spirit It Was Written, Impossible Without America," He Says

Holds League Proved Its Power in Greco-Italian Crisis-Backs Wilson Idealism

Still an unwavering idealist, Col. Edward M. House, who returned Friday from Europe, in an interview with a representative of The Christian Science Monitor, mapped out, step by step, the tortuous way over which post-war Europe stumbled toward chaos—then expressed his own conviction that "the world has turned the corner. There are better, brighter days ahead."

Almost five years have passed since Colonel House, friend and confidant of Woodrow Wilson, went, with the President, to Versailles to help in the task of framing a Treaty of Peace—a treaty not only designed to end the war, but to serve as a constitution for a new world in which, co-opera-tion being substituted for coercion, all wars might be done away.

During the five years he has watched the high purposes which had carried the people of many nations close to a goal toward which for centuries they had been striving; then he saw those high purposes seemingly overwhelmed and made to serve the end of ex-ponents of the old order. "But we will return," he declared, "for the world wants peace. Militarists have had their day. There is an international conscience today and it has the means for expressing itself. Neither Mussolini nor any other apparently powerful leader can long defy it."

"International Conscience"

This international conscience, Colone! House believes, has grown up in spite of the withdrawal of America from the European settlement: "It is easy," he said, "to plant the Treaty of Versailles at the root of all of Europe's post-war evils. It is more accurate to place America's rejection of the Treaty there. The trouble has been less with the Treaty than with the administerin the spirit in which it was written was impossible without America." He added:

Here is the situation, in brief: Germany, at Versailles, was made to sign a blank check. That doubtlessly, was a mistake. Nevertheless, it was done, and the task of filling in that check was left to a reparation commission. Had America been a member of that commission there is no question but that the final amount would have been agreed upon speedily and Germany probably would have paid.
But America faltered. For an entire year Germany and Europe marked time waiting for American action, and the check was not filled in. Then America rejected the Treaty. Lloyd George, too, reversed his policy and Germany, counting on this division among the Allies, began to hope that it might escape paying alterather. Then the Garmans have

The most recent, comprehensive study of the problem of capital pun-ishment has just been completed by Major Lewis E. Lawes, warden of Sing Sing, and a very active opponent of capital punishment. The results of his nation-wide investigation have been placed at the disposal of The Christian Science Monitor. In addi-tion to the compilation of data Major Lawes has been in communication with the governors of states where capital punishment has been abolished.

Extreme Penalty No Deterrent His own conclusion is "that the combined weight of the evidence of all these independent groups of statistical data, each corroborating the other, inclines the scale so strongly that the thinking person is bound to conclude that the death penalty has no apparent effect as a deterrent."

Further, he declares, that in states where capital punishment has been abolished "there appears to be little public sentiment in favor of a return to the death penalty, according to the opinions expressed by the governors. Much of the sentiment against the abolition of capital punishment in the states which still retain it, I believe, is due to the fact that the public has not been awakened to the real facts. Most men give little thought to the problem and dismiss it with the hasty conclusion that only with legalized murder by the state can illegal murder by the individual be checked."

Question of Polish Minorities Adjudicated Upon - League Held Competent

By Special Cable

GELDERLAND, Holland, Sept. 18—
The World Court on Saturday gave an advisory opinion in answer to a question regarding the interpretation of Article 4 of the Polish Minorities Treaty of June 28, 1919. According to this article, Poland admits and declares to be Polish, ipso facto, persons of German nationality born in the territory ceded to Poland by Germany.

It is the Legauge of Nations Colons one-third of their industries to France rather than to allow the Communists to take them all. There is a widespread belief that France is bent upon the dismember-ment of Germany and will not be content merely with reparations. I realize there is such a belief, but it is to be remembered there is now an international conscience and there is means for expressing it. The militarists and the exploiters and the annexationists, powerful though they may appear to be, dare not reckon without it. ritory ceded to Poland by Germany, pute was referred, arrived at the conclusion that the League was competent, as the wording of the treaty tent, as the wording of the treaty showed that the minorities referred to might be the minorities of the inhabitants without regard to the question of their political allegiance. It was furthermore held that the clauses concerning nationality being inserted in the minorities treaty proved that the acquisition of Polish nationality by ex-Germans was placed under the protection of the League, for otherwise these clauses would partly overlap corresponding provisions of the Peace Treaty. The Court also decided that the terms of Article 4 only required the parents of the persons in question to have been habitually resident in the territory ceded at time of the birth of such persons as the additional conditions imposed by Poland were arbitrary and tended to lessen the value of the treaty.

The American judge, John Bassett Moore, agreeing with the Court's opinion, had to leave The Hague before the final decision was fixed, while Lord Finlay, although agreeing with the decision in general, had some points of dissension regarding the motives of the decision were less of a theoretical.

As for America's present not their energy distant in their prejudice, have united, many of them, in condemning the League for not insisting upon its undoubted prerogatives. They, however, overlook two facts. First of these is the fact that the League's concern is to keep peace—regardless of who does the keeping. Second, the League's concern is to keep peace—regardless of these is the fact that the League's concern is to keep peace—regardless of who does the keeping. Second, the League, kinowing the opposition of Mussolini to it, realized that settlement through its own machinery would be more difficult than through its own machinery would be more difficult than through its own direct authority. There are many divergent opinions on Europe's problems, but I have falled to find a single individual who is conversant with international affairs who is not convinced that, had America played its part in 1919, the present that the reague's concern showed that the minorities referred

The actual settlement was accomplished by the Council of Ambassadors but the League was behind it. The small nations whose concerted opposition to Mussolini drove him to a retreat from his original position, would never have been heard in 1914. Today they meet in the League, and Mussolini was not left long in doubt of the force of their disapproval.

League Keeps Peace

Friends of the League, in their en-thusiasm, and opponents of the League, in their prejudice, have united, many of

As for America's present policy of isolation Colonel House preferred to let it speak for itself. "We have had four years of isolation," he said, "and what has it accomplished? Nothing—save the reconstruction of many of those things we hoped that the war had destroyed and the destruction of many of the better things we hoped had come from it." He concluded:

There is hope, however. We have just seen the most serious post-war crisis amicably settled. So long as the machinery exists whereby settlements can be accomplished peaceably, and so long as the nations of the world are increasingly convinced of the desirability of utilizing that machinery, there is basis for faith that, in the end, that closer world understanding for which we strove in 1919 may be brought to pass. Europe, I hope, has turned the corner, and there will be better, brighter days ahead.

Overseas Representatives to Discuss Many Vital Questions-Premiers on Their Way

By Cable from Monitor Bureau LONDON, Sept. 18-The Imperial Conference is due to open shortly in Downing Street and representatives of are due to arrive during next week. Their stay will probably extend over at least five or six weeks, for the sub-jects to be discussed are both numerous and important. It has been arranged at present that economic questions will be debated in separate conferences, but both bodies will meet concurrently.

Owing to the great importance of these economic questions as affecting the prosperity of the various portions of the Empire, the overseas prime ministers are bringing considerable bodies of expert advisers to assist them in their work. The first meeting is fixed for Oct. 1, and, as at the last conference in 1921 it will be opened by the British Prime Minister, Stanley Baldwin, who will outline the general position of imperial policy. At Boston Theaters

Copley theatergoers enjoyed a treat last night in R. C. Carton's farce, "Mr. Hopkinson." Toned down to the sphere of comedy, the play had a rendering that few repertory companies could hope to achieve, a rendering that was marked by excellent teamwork, in which Henry Jewett, under whose direction the productions at this theater are staged, takes a special pride. It is his idea that there shall be no individual rise to a point of indispensability, and and versatile comedian, E. E. there was no glare in the spotlight to dim the supporting members of the cast.

It is a ludicrous situation to find a grocer's clerk, of the type of "Mr. Hop-kinson," in the realms of high society, breaking his way into a life to which kinson," in the realms of high society, breaking his way into a life to which he is unaccustomed and paying the cost from a newly acquired fortune to a heavily mortgaged duchess and the visiting list of youths whose heavily depleted treasury is their only curb on pleasure. It is not a new situation. It was employed in "Me and Sammy," the miner suddenly raised to affluence in the story books with his dog "Sammy," which he insisted on taking to college with him while he endeavored to absorb the teachings of great masters. But it comes afresh when treated as Mr. Carton treated it and presented as skillfully as the Copley Players presented it. Comic situations are an asset to a farce, but they are not essential. Given a flippant and evasive Lady Thyra Egglesby as played in a subdued manner by Katherine Standing; given the cool "nerve" of a Lord Gawthorpe as enacted by L. Paul Scott; given a Duke of Braceborough of sporting instinct, an Ascot babitue, care-free unless when enacted by L. Paul Scott; given a Duke of Braceborough of sporting instinct, an Ascot habitue, care-free unless when the relentless balance sheet shows an everburdened debit, with an actor of the caliber of Charles Hampden to play the part; given an Otho Dursingham, dexterous and resourceful in his tactics, as conceivet by Philip Tonge, and last, but not least, a Duchess of Braceborough with the sweeping voice of Catherline.

Likewise May Ediss appeared in the rôle of Eliza Dibb, an old "flame" of Mr. Hopkinson, a maid-servant who is not to be downed. In the case of the play itself, "Mr. Hopkinson." everything depends on the acting. Stagecraft and the ingenuity of the costumer count for little. Those who witnessed the initial presentation of "Nice People," a comedy by Rachel Crothers, at the St. James Theater last night, were prepared, if they had read the story of the play, to just the plain-spoken picture of modern society life which was presented. It is the seamy side, whatever those who participate in it may believe, and the portrayal is convincing, albeit the spade seldom fails to be called by its right name.

Of course there is a moral. The young girl, petted and spoiled by an indulgent father, quite naturally demands the privilege of "living her own life" withprivilege of "living her own life" without restraint or interference. The people of the younger set in which she stantial proof.

Miss Bushnell, as Theodora Gloucester, the central figure in the play, showed marked adaptability to the rôle.

Always responsive to any demand upon her talents, she seems eminently fitted her talents, she seems emineutly fitted to such a characterization as that assumed in this particular cast. Miss Layng, as the solicitous aunt, gave added evidence of her ability to interpret and render what, in the hands of another, might have proved mere preachment. The support throughout was generally good.

James M. Curley, Mayor, continuing his efforts to obtain air mail service for Boston, with the recently opened air port in East Boston as a terminal, wrote Senator Lodge yesterday ex-pressing apprehension lest Boston be overlooked. The letter follows:

My telegram to you requesting that the Boston Airport be included in the Air Mail Service was predicated on the knowledge that you are and have been a practical politician for more than a quarter of a century and that if anyone could secure results it should be you—not only because of your long service in Washington, but because of your personal relations with the President of the United States, and whom it was my very great pleasure to hear you refer to in such laudatory terms at the recent Gloucester celebration.

Your request that I suggest under what general law or general appropriation fund may be secured for opening Air Mail Service at the Boston Airport indicates a latent sense of humor on your part, which, were the subject matter less important, might be worthy of appreciation.

INDIAN PROBLEM ACUTE IN AFRICA

for Whites Leads to Segregation Movement in South Africa

respondence)-The problem of the on and off than there is on an es Indian living among the white population has rapidly become the most acute in Africa. The settlement in Kenya, as suggested by the Colonial Office, has raised intense bitterness among Indians throughout the continent, and the uncompromising utter-ances of Mr. Sastri, the Indian leader, have done much to intensify feeling.

No sooner had the news reached
South Africa that the Colonial Office suggested the retention of the high lands in Kenya for the white settlers than General Smuts began speaking in Natal on the need for the segre gation of Indians in the Union of South Africa.

It is well known that the Union Government intends to bring forward during the next session of Parliament a bill that will mean segregation of Indians in South Africa. The problem belongs not only to Natal, but is becoming a problem for the whole of Africa, as the Indian tends to migrate to the interior.

Indian Problem Uppermost

Net only Kenya but Tanganyika is in the throes of the Indian problem and not only Natal and the Cape, but the Transvaal also, is becoming alarmed at, its growth. General Smuts is notoriously firm on the Indian question in Africa. It had been said that the settlement in Kenya due to strong representations made by the Premier of South Africa to the Colonial Office.

In a speech that he made in Natal recently, he said:

I see no reason, If this question is fairly and justly dealt with, why the Indian population should object to it. There exists a good cause for a substantial measure of segregation.

That is what we propose, and I know it is a very heavy program. No South it is a very heavy program. No South African Government has tried it before. It is a case where we, as a European community, have only one plain duty before us. We can only carry cut that

Equal Franchise Demanded

One incident not previously touched upon is that the Indian community have recently continually put forward to the Government a demand for equal franchise rights, and now they have been supported by Indians elsewhere. With regard to the franchise, we see no reason to make a distinction between Indians in this country and natives in this country.

There is the colored line which is in There is the colored line which is in existence today, right or wrong. I do not argue about that, but it is a cleariy marked line you can follow. Once you cross that line we see no reason why there should be any distinction between Indians and natives; and if Indians have to have the franchise then I see no reason why it should not be given to natives. We all know what the effect of that would be, and, therefore, I say that the only wise course in this matter of franchise is to go very, very carefully indeed.

SOUTHEND HAS NOVEL NONSTOP RAILWAY

LONDON, Sept. 2—A novel railway system will shortly be completed for the Kursaal at Southend-on-Sea. It is the invention of Mr. Yorath Lewis, an engineer, and would seem to have possibilities for city traffic. The railway at Southend is about Philip nestled down in the feathers and held on tight. The bird flapped his wings, rose up into the air and straight out to sea. The wind blew in the little boy's face. He looked and saw the ocean, blue and sparkling, stretched out far below. Far out of sight of land was a lighthouse, on a pile of rocks. They circled close to the windows, and the keeper waved his hand to them.

"Hold tight," said the gull, and he suddenly dropped like a stone, so close to the water that the spray dashed into Philip's eyes. Then, with a great flapping, they rose again and rested on the wind with wings spread out. Finally they came to the beach again.
The sea gull landed gently and Philip slid off his back.

"Thank you, sir," he said.
"Oh, not at all," said the sea gull, and started to fly off.
"But I'm the wrong size," screamed Philip, looking with dismay at his huge pail beside him on the sand.

"So you are," said the gull. It took up the opera glasses again and looked him through the other end. Then Philip was the right size, and he took up his pail and shovel and started home along the heach.

F ARE just returned from a two the beauty of the scene. How perfectly days' trip to the dark forests these full rushing streams typify the and picturesque lakelets lying wildness of the mountains! Unclose under the Continental Divide, lonely places where nature has full sway, unfettered and undisturbed by abandon, hurrying onward until their sway, unfettered and undisturbed by abandon, hurrying onward until their waters, in the way. man. This region is a wilderness won-derland, the true spirit of which is re-vealed only to those who through visit-ing its vastnesses learn of its secrets majestic serenity to the Gulf. Viewat first hand. We went on foot, my lady in blue and myself, for we held that only thus is established that intimate contact with nature which remains the high sources where melting snows mate contact with nature which reveals its deeper meanings. Acquaintance with the secrets of nature is not gained by headlong assault, but rather by gentle approach; not by noisy crowds and boisterous ways, but alone, or in small groups, by silent and gentle insinuation of oneself into her moods whereby one becomes, as it were a part of the setting of the stage.

At an early hour we took the trail leading almost due west into the cañon, dark and mysterious with everchanging tints of blue even in the brilliant light of the morning, but darker and more alluring in the after-water and more alluring in the after-water's edge. On the far side, the noon shadows. Following up the hurrying Big Thompson, through level stretches strewn with wild flowers and studded with willows, through groves of quaking aspens—through groves aspension of the lakelet. On the farther works where industrious heavers have through groves of quaking aspens— perfect background for the limpid "quakin' asps," the natives say—by waters of the lakelet. On the farther pools where industrious beavers have dammed the stream for their private purposes, across fields of huge bowlders thrown off by the force of the elements from the towering mountain sides, we went mile after mile, always up; but at first so gradual is the ascent that one is scarcely aware of the constant upward trend.

The birds at this season are plentiful in the open glades of the valley, and varieties that have kept quite apart during the nesting season now mingle with fine intimacy. In a sin-gle flock we identified Wilson's, Mac-Gilvoy's, and the paleolated warblers, a female Western tanger, and what I thought to be an Audubon's warbler; while on the outskirts of the band, the mountain chickadees, happy and tuneful as always, performed the acrobatic feats characteristic of their family. Wilson's warbler is easily identified by the black crown and the dark olive green of the back. It is distinguished from the paleolated, which also has a black crown, by its darker plumage, the latter showing more yellow on the upper parts and brighter yellow underneath. A flock of warblers at this season presents many difficulties in identification. The full-grown young are clad quite differently from the adults, so that to be sure of one's ground, it becomes necessary to make a study of the plumage of immature birds. An added difficulty is the decided contrast in many varieties between male and female. Besides, they are restless sprites, constantly fitting in and out of the tree tops now in full leafage; and it seems that no sooner are the glasses fixed upon a warbler than it is gone in pursuit of an insect, or is difficulty with the fock. Yet nationee. drifting with the flock. Yet patience, a quick eye and experience in bird observation, will work wonders.

After about three miles on our way the trail begins to ascend abruptly, and we lift into the higher reaches. The timber, flowers and bird life change, and one could almost think himself in the spruce woods of Maine or the Adirondacks. The twin-flower (Linnea), daintiest of all wild flowers, with an odor as delicious as it is delicate, hangs its tiny bells in profusion above the mossy carpet. The glossy af of the wintergreen appears fully, and gray moss hangs in shreds from fir and spruce. The Mariposa lily and the beautiful asters of varied colors so plentiful in the valley are not here; but in the open glades the Indian paintbrush takes on a brighter hue and the pale green variety (pallida) abounds. The trees on these high slopes are the limber pine, the lodgepole pine, and the sugar pine, the Engelmann spruce, tall and straight as a flagpole, and the

Stowed close under this natural shelter, the restraint arising from lack of acquaintance is thrown aside, and the identity of the party is disclosed: a good physician from southwestern Iowa, a frequenter of these high places for his holiday, who, better prepared than I for the sudden weather changes here, generously loans me his sweater; a Presbyterian clergyman from an eastern city, with a sturdy young mountaineer as companion; a professor of astronomy from an eastern college; a gentleman and his daughter from Ohio; the doctor's party of three ladies, and ourselves-all grouped under the overhanging shelf. London Waste Lands Turned Into Gardens

London Special Correspondence SEED brought from America by A a woman is responsible for eight said, gardens in London. Derelict The most congested parts of London and the children are taught that cabbages do not "grow on barrows" as one of them thought. For the first time in their lives they have seen a worm. The children have worked hard for their gardens. In Ratcliff they began to dig ground where court-ways had stood until condemned by the authori-It was an adventure to fall suddenly into a cellar, but three layers of foundations had actually to be dug out before they could begin planting. Under the direction of Miss Rosalie Mercer, their garden teacher, and voluntary helpers, who are all too scarce, they have made use of almost everything they found. Huge pieces of granite have made a charming rockery. The stones were too big for the children to move alone, but by all forming a tug-of-war they rolled them up easily. Other stones which were dug up are being used for a Dutch garden which the little gardeners have sunk a foot deep. They are making a brick garden setting the old bricks like a lattice-work on a mound against a with rock-plants between each. And because the children's garden is also a playground, they are making a switch-back down the other side.

Only 32 children can be plot-holders, but 150 can come and play. Nine thousand children used the garden last summer. They dance to the music of a gramophone, and sing and act.
Perambulators are used to screen off the big brother of the Alps. After an hour, all the party except ourselves, being supplied with rain clothes, proceed down the mountain to the warm cover of Fern Lodge, while we remain cover of Fern Lodge, while we remain feast is held in the Ratcliff Garden when the children are taught how to cook the vegetables they have grown. The eagerness of the children to come was illustrated by a quaint incident. "Have you seen Whitehead's twins?" said a child to the garden-teacher. The teacher went to see what had happened and found the babies "buried" up to the waist in the ground. Their ingenious brother, who could not come to the garden without them, had dug them in so that they could not get into mischief, and he could get on with his plot!

Recently she was awarded the Zona Gale scholarship at the University of Wisconsin. It was her poetry which attracted the attention of the scholarship com-mittee, even before they had heard the story of her life. At the oppor-tune time when the committee members were casting about for someone Miss Zaturensky's friends heard of Vachel Lindsay, Rose O'Neil and many others sent warmest letters of recommendation.

Miss Zaturensky gives an interesting description of herself at the age of 8, when with her family, she landed at Ellis Island. A red shawl covered her head, passed about her shoulders, and was then tied about her waist. She clung to her mother's skirts. An official resplendent with gold braid, smiled and patted her on the head.

"I thought that he must be at least the Mayor of New York if not the President of the United States and I was so pleased," Miss Zaturensky

The Zaturenskys, father, mother, ground has been taken in eight of the daughter and little brother, moved to a few rooms in a loft building around the corner from the Henry Street Settlement. Here in the most crowded, noisy part of New York Miss Zaturensky spent her childhood.

The public library was always a retreat for her. She spent hours in shadowy corners of the big building until the gong warned her out and then she would trudge home in the dark with great armfuls of books.

It was hung on the wall in a large, gilt frame. It marked the end of school days and the beginning of work in a ribbon factory.

In this factory for two years Miss Zaturensky wove ribbons upon movshuttles. At this time she was small, her oval face accentuated by tight-pulled hair, ending with a long straight braid. As she wove the gay ribbons, she spun the words of a new language in a more fantastic, yet more

The heart of Holy Russia beating still.

Over a snow-cold steppe and on a hill;
One day in Kieve I heard a great churchbell

Crying a strange farewell. And once in a great field, the reapers sowing Barley and wheat, I saw a great light growing Over the weary bowed heads of the reapers; As growing sweeter, stranger, ever deeper, From the long waters sorrowfully strong. Came the last echoes of the River Song:

Here in this alien crowd I walk apart, Clasping remembered beauty to my heart. There followed after the factory more "alien crowds." Struck by her poetry which had appeared in several magazines and thinking to befriend her a newspaper editor gave her a position on a large New York daily. Strangely enough they sent this child to report the most sensational trials. But she found a place for herself among a group of vounger poets in Greenwich village. Here were people with whom she could talk of things about which she cared.

Again she was befriended, this time by the editor of a magazine who rescued her from her uncongenial newspaper work. To sit in a quiet office, conning over manuscript, seemed to Miss Zaturensky paradise enough. But her good fortune was not to last. In a period when she was unable to work, and poor and lonely, she wrote a poem which changed her future. Never thinking that she had a chance to win the prize offered by the Poetry Society of New York, she submitted a nutil the gong warned her out and hen she would trudge home in the ark with great armfuls of books.

Speculative sentiment was confused at the opening of today's New York stock market. There was a resumption of selling pressure against the low-priced oils, Cosden, Sinclair, and Producers & Refiners establishing new low prices for the year. Cosden fell 1½ to 26%.

Increasing pressure developed against the low-priced oil shares, Pierce Oil presert falling 6% to 19, while Cosden extended its loss to 2 points and Sinclair 1. The general market pursued a contrary course, many important stocks improving large fractions while Du Pont rose 1% and Gulf States Steel, Cerro de Pasco, American Can, Davison Chemical and New York Air Brake 1 to 1½. Foreign exchange rates opened lower.

PIG IRON OUTPUT CUT
BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Sept. 18—Another reduction in pig iron production went into effect today in Alabama when the Woodward Iron Company blew out its Vanderbilt furnace. Twenty-three blast furnaces still are operating in Alabama, eight on basic iron. The market still lags, $23 being the price on No. 2 foundry.

PRIMARY COTTON GOODS MARKETS SHOW STRENGTH

Prices Rising Due to Advance in Raw Product—Demand Good —Less Curtailment

NEW BEDFORD, Mass., Sept. 18 (Special)—With raw cotton standing once more at the 30-cent level, after an advance of 4 cents a pound in the last month and of 2 cents a pound in the last few days, it was inevitable that prices in primary cotton goods markets should go up. They have risen materially in the last week or 10 days, but not nearly so fast nor so much as has the raw material.

Second-Hand Selling

That they did not follow the raw material in full measure was due, at least in part, to the development of considerable second-hand selling, which tended to keep prices down. Prices, of course, are so much higher than they were only a month ago that the buyers of goods at that time already have a handsome profit and some are reselling in the gray, without waiting to put the goods actually into trade channels. The market on wide 64x60s reached 10¼c and was firm at that level, with eastern goods quoted from ½c to ¾c a yard higher. These prices did not materially slow up the buying, though some mills that tried to get 11c instead of 10¼ were unable to do so in large volume because of the second-hand of-ferings at so much lower figures.

Other wide constructions moved up in proportion, but the narrow goods were more sluggish and did not gain as much as the wide constructions. Fall River reported sales for the last week estimore singsish and did not gain as much as the wide constructions. Fall River reported sales for the last week estimated at about 170,000 pieces, which included some fairly active dealing in twills and sateens.

been moved up, of course, in conformity with the jump in cotton, though in many cases the goods sold this week were lots held in stock for some time until a favorable opportunity for liquidation should present itself.

Novelties in Demand

Novelties in Demand

Fancies and novelties, of course, have been in good demand steadily and there seems no special lessening in this type of business, though all of it, necessarily, must be for future delivery. As a matter of fact, there was more future delivery business this week than many suppose, buyers, apparently, being less hesitant about paying the asking prices on such orders than they are on spot or nearby goods.

The earnings statement of the Sinclair Consolidated Oll Corporation for six months ended June 30. last, indicates the common stock dividend was not earned in that period. The dividend rate is 50 cents quarterly.

HEAVIER MIDWEST AUTUMN BUSINESS TIGHTENS MONEY

Retail and Wholesale Trade Larger Than Year Ago-Branch Banking Problems

CHICAGO, Sept. 18 (Special)—There has been a slight hardening of the money market in the last week. The range for commercial paper is now 5 to 51/2 per cent, as compared with the quotations of 5 to 51/4 which have prevailed for several months. The bulk of the business is being placed at 514 per

An increase in the borrowing demand is noted and there has been some shrinkage in the amount of available funds which is due in part to the advance in call money rates in the east. There is a good outlet for paper, but it is principally in the interior, as the metropolitan banks are pretty well loaned up.

Country banks are taking care of their home demands for crop-moving purposes without inconvenience and there is a supply of surplus money in the southwest, where harvests are farthest advanced and where some mondy is beginning to return from the marketing of farm products. This relaxation is offset in a measure by the disturbance in the oil industry, which is tying up a good deal of money.

Brisk Autumn Business

Fall business has started briskly and orders to wholesalers and the large mail order houses are running ahead of the corresponding time last year. Stocks of retailers are in good condition and the unusually early beginning of the public demand for heavier apparel due to cool weather is widening their outlet and stimulating their orders for replenish-

Retail sales in Chicago are 10 to 15 per cent higher than a year ago and similar conditions are reported by interior merchants, who are in the city markets in much larger numbers than

At the offices of the National Association of Bankers Opposed to Branch Banking in this city much significance is attached to developments which are regarded as indicating a definite new policy against extension of this practice on the part of the Federal Reserve Board. The board, it is learned, has rejected eight proposals for new branch banks in California.

Setback to Branch Banking

The subject is becoming of vital interest in the central west, and since the organization of the association several months ago an energetic agitation has been conducted with a view to arousing sentiment against what is regarded as a menace to the existing banking system.

Lord Claud Hamilton

HE Rt. Hon. Lord Claud Hamilton retired early this year from the chairmanship of the Great Eastern Railway. This position he has held for 30 years. The second son of the first Duke of Abercorn, Lord Claud was educated at Harrow and spent a few years in the Grenadier Guards. He went to the Great Eastern Railway in 1872 and in 1882 became its chairman. He was the driving force in the early days of the development of its continental traffic, the Hook of Holland having been "discovered" while he was chairman of the continental committee. At one time the Great Eastern used to advertise a through route to Peking and Tokyo via the Hook and trans-Siberian railway.

His tenancy of the chairmanship has witnessed the enormous growth in suburban traffic, and also the electrification of the suburban lines.

Lord Claud has always been a keen lover of all games, having excelled at cricket, football, and racquets. He was Member of Parliament from 1865 to 1868, 1869 to 1888, and also again from 1910 to 1918. In 1917 he was made a Privy Councilor.

The Pacific Southwest Trust & Savings Bank has been refused authority to absorb the Pioneer Bank of Porterville with branches at Strathmore and Exeter and to establish another branch at Long Beach. The Bank of Italy has been denied permission to absorb two banks at Long Beach and to open branches at El Centro in Imperial Valley and at Yuba City.

The inference drawn is that the reserve board has decided not to approve further branch establishments or consolidations which will enlarge California's bigger branch banking organizations.

Taking a long view of the Canadian situation outlings is warranted; for it

That Canada, with that much more wheat for sale, had no trouble in finding a market is evident from the fact that at the end of August there were 7,500,000 fewer bushels on hand than at the corresponding date in 1921. The United States during the year took 3,000,000 bushels less than in 1921-22; but other countries took a great deal more. Exports of flour during the year were 11,663,000 barrels, or 3,190,000 more than during the preceding year, an increase its purpose, because small stocks are 446,750,000 of which it credits to the prairie provinces.

As the latter portion of the estimate is only 6,000,000 bushels below that of the Manitoba Free Press, it is fairly good proof that the western crop is remarkably large. Alberta, with 149,000,000 bushels, or more than double that of last year, has brought up the total to new high figures. If the Government estimate is correct, the prairie ernment estimate is correct, the prairie provinces will yield 70,000,000 more bushels of wheat than they did in 1922. In the face of figures such as these.

it could hardly be otherwise than that business should be buoyant. It is true that grain prices are low, and that ow-ing to the damage through rust and other causes, the return to the farmer will be adversely affected. At the same time the greatly increased yield per acre over a large portion of the West would be quite a compensating factor.

Other Crops Booming Wheat is not the only big crop in the west, for the Government estimate anticipates a yield of 896,000,000 bushels of wheat, oats, barley, rye and flax-seed. In the aggregate this should mean a money return of more than $500,000,000. Considered from the transportation standpoint alone the mere marketing of this great volume of grain

During the five months ended August, fully 70,000 immigrants had entered, or nearly double the number for the corresponding period last year. The trade returns for the crop year ended Aug. 31 show that the total exports of wheat during this time were 229,681,000 bushels, an increase of 71,000,000 over those for the preceding year. During August, 11,419,000 bushels went out, or about 150,000 less than for the corresponding routh lest wear.

How to get $1,806 interest from a $1,000 bond

One thousand dollars invested in a fifteen-year Miller First Mortgage Bond, paying 7%, will bring you a total of $1,050 in interest—$35 in cash every six months, to be used as you please.

If, instead of spending the interest money, you use it to buy additional Miller 7% Bonds, thereby compounding your money*, you will receive in a lump sum in the fifteenth year a total of $1,806 interest. Your original $1,000 will thus have amounted to $2,806.

The $1,806 earned in 15 years at 7% compound interest represents an average of more than 12% per year on your $1,000 investment.

These remarkable returns are made possible to the investor because most of our issues are secured by incomeearning structures in Southern cities, where 7% is the prevailing rate. Miller Bonds secured by New York City property, and precisely similar to our Southern issues, pay 64%. To anyone who would like further information about these securities which have never caused a loss to any investor, we will gladly present a booklet of facts about Miller Bonds. Call, write or telephone for "Creating Good Investments."

> *This method of investing is based on the plan of adding to your "odd amounts" of interest, as received, sufficient money to buy an additional $100, $500 or $1,000 Miller 7% Bond. These extra sums, which are not included in the figures shown below, actually increase the amount you get back at the end of 15 years. The way your original $1,000 grows is shown by the following table:

Years	Amount	Years	Amount
. 1	$1,071	6	$1,511
2	1,147	7	1,618
3	1,229	. 8	1,734
4	1,316	10	1,989
5	1,410	15	2,806

To get all your money back at the same time, you would reinvest your interest in bonds maturing in the fifteenth year.

Fundamental conditions in this country are sound and the improvement in general business indicates that the upward trend will continue with well defined progress. This is further evidenced by the recent strengthening in prices of securities.

Notwithstanding this advance in prices there is still an unusual opportunity to obtain well-secured investments yielding more than what is ordinarily considered a fair rate.

qualifying rounds yesterday as though they thought the tournament rested between them. Both shot 75 to tie for second on the opening day, and each undercut that figure by one stroke yesterday, deadlocking with totals of 149 for 26 holes. Another curious turn came when both required three putts on the critical eighteenth green, Evans taking par 5 and Jones a 6.

Putting proved to be the greatest source of difficulty for the second half of the qualifying round. In the late morning and noon hours the greens were so hard and fast that many were deceived in their calculations. Disasters resulted from approaches that did not spin back as the players were led to expect from Saturday's experience. With this warning the afternoon players expect from Saturday's experience. With this warning the afternoon players went out and underputted on the long ones, the smooth green patches softening unaccountably. Jones was heard to complain on this score, he being an early one around. "I took 37 putts, four three-put holes and two one-putt holes," he said, and explained that neither of his ace putts was for more than 18 inches.

Two strange putts on the final green cost Evans his chance to capture undisputed medal honors. He was on in 2 with a 25-foot putt that would have put him out in 72. The green sloped disputed medal honors. He was on in 2 with a 25-foot putt that would have put him out in 72. The green sloped acutely to the right and his putt was not only short, but rolled off two feet. It left him a five-foot putt and he missed it by an inch, rolling six inches over. It was a hard break, giving him a 74. There were many thrills, featured by the recovery of several former champions who were down in the opening list, but the galleries missed the thrills through picking the wrong stars. That is, excepting those who followed Jones and Evans. On the sidelines the day was quiet and meditative. On the whole the galleryites were strangely sedentary, electing to sit westigned.

Gardner, who led the first day of medal play with a par 74, tumbled from first to tie for tenth with a score of $2—156. He was in trouble and couldn't get out—he lipped too many cups—his approaches left too much work for his putter to do. That is the story of Gardner's fall, a fall which duplicated his performance at Brookline in the amateur last year. duplicated his performance at Brookline in the amateur last year.

PITTSBURGH, Sept. 17—In a game that was scheduled to be a duel of left-handers, the Boston Braves early got to the delivery of A. W. Cooper, finding him for six runs in the first six innings and giving their own pitcher, R. W. Marquard, a sizable lead to work upon. The defeat established a modern record.

Seldom, if ever, has the tall Giant first baseman done better work at bat than in recent games. If he keeps it up, a big swath is likely to be cut in the effectiveness of the Yankee pitching staff. The "duel" of hitters, Ruth and Kelly, in the coming world's series, both at the Yankee Stadium and at the reconstructed Polo Grounds, shapes up as one of the biggest prospects of the 1923 autumn event.

Grounds, snapes up as one of the objects of the 1923 autumn event.

Some of the major league managers, with little or no hope of advancing higher in this year's race, are wisely undertaking to develop new playing material. The Browns have a center fielder named whaley and a pitcher named Grant who have been given workouts; the Cardinals have Hudgins and Be'l, not to mention Howard Freigau, in the infield, Miller in the outfield and Niebergall behind the bat. The Phillies have moved J. A. Tierney over to third base and are-letting a youngster. Metz, cover second. The Red Sox have been giving a number of new pitchers, including Howe, Stimson and Biethen, a chance to show their wares. Maurice Archdeacon, formerly with the Braves, is patroling center field for the Chicago White Sox and making a good thing of it. And so it goes.

a good thing of it. And so it goes.

Youth will be served, it is true, but so will some of the veterans. John Quinn went into the game in the ninth as relief pitcher, with one run over, two men on base and only one out. A sacrifice put the runners on second and third; E. T. Collins, who already had made six hits for the day, was given an intentional base on balls. This filled the bases, but Quinn proceeded to end the game by striking out E. H. Sheely and William Barrett.

Manager F. F. Mitchell and Third Baseman N. D. Boeckel of the Braves have been punished by the league president for arguing too strenuously with impires in the west.

Washington collected 31 hits in the double-header with St. Louis, which was won by Walter Johnson.

PROFESSIONAL THREE-CUSHION BILLIARD STANDING

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 18 (Special)—The feature match in the last day of play here for the world's three-cushion billiard championship will bring together the two leaders. this afternoon the two leaders, T. S. Denton of Kansas City and Otto Reiselt of Philadelphia. The evening match will be between R. L. Cannefax of New York and J. M. Layton of this city, who is the present holder of the title.

Reiselt and Denton are leading by virtue of their victories over both Cannefax and Layton. Having disposed of Layton Sunday, Reiselt won his second match from Cannefax yesterday by a score of 60 to 36 in 60 innings. The by a score of 60 to 36 in 60 innings. The match was a direct contrast to the games of Sunday, both in speed and style of play. Reiselt made a run of 4 in the fifth inning, which put him in the lead by one point. He never was pressed by Cannefax thereafter. Reiselt played the best game that has been shown in the contest so far, and his average was high considering the fact that 18 of his points were singles. From the fourth to the seventeenth from the fourth to the seventeenth inning he ran 24 points. His high run was 7, and he made two 5s and a 4 on other occasions. Cannefax shot 4 for his highest run, and also made a pair of 3s.

Reiselt was leading, 43 to 26, in the fortieth inning, and increased his lead to 52 to 29 at 50 innings. One of the shots of the match was a massé by Reiselt off a deliberate safety by Cannefax. Reiselt almost made the same practically relief to the contraction. spectacular close that he unlosened against Layton, when his run of 4 carried him to within one point of the match. His run of 8 ended his clash with the title holder Sunday evening. The match by innings:

Denton also showed good form in winning his second match from Layton yesterday by a 60-to-44 score in 73 innings. The title holder again seemed to be considerably off his game and he missed frequently, often on shots that he normally makes with ease.

Denton assumed the lead at the very opening of the match and maintained it throughout. He was leading 24 to 12 in the twentieth inning. In the twentywhen the twentieth inning. In the twenty-seventh inning Denton forfeited a point when the ball failed to hit a cushion on a deliberate safety shot. By the fortieth inning his lead was increased to 38-24, and in the fiftieth inning the count was 41-26, with the leader having the match well in hand. The match by points:

Harvard Football Men Indulge in Morning Practice-Large Number Report to Fisher

L. A. Littlefield '25, a promising candidate for guard or tackle, was the only new man to report for the Harvard variety football team when the candidates turned out at Soldiers Field this morning. He was due to report yesterday when the first practice was held but was delayed. He is a transfer from Tufts College, but did not play football there, his last football work being with Cambridge High and Latin School where he was rated as a fine schoolboy player. Head Coach R. T. Fisher did not come out for the morning work, which was in made 146 runs of which M. Mayaton he was rated as a fine schoolboy player.

Head Coach R. T. Fisher did not come out for the morning work, which was in charge of J. L. Knox '98 and Trainer W. F. Donovan. The candidates were put through some setting-up exercises and were dressed lightly. This afternoon's work is expected to have more real football connected with it.

The appearance of the men as they took the field for their practice yesterday was very pleasing to followers of the Crimson, as there were not only some 131 out for places, but the squad appeared to have a large number of players well built for football work. There was also a large fumber of letter men in the squad. A few of the players who reported will not be eligible for the feam until they have made up some of their studies; but all are expected to get in good standing before the big games start.

Prospects for Football Season Are Far From Bright

PRINCETON, N. J., Sept. 18—The 1923 football campaign started at Princeton University yesterday when a squad of 55 candidates turned out for the varsity eleven at University Field for the first practice session this fall. Prospects for the season, according to Head Coach W. W. Roper, are anything the varsity eleven at University Field for the first practice session this fall. Prospects for the season, according to Head Coach W. W. Roper, are anything but bright.

Under the direction of Coach Roper and a group of assistant coaches, among whom were N. Poe, Albert Wittmer Jr. 122, M. P. Dickerson '23, Edward Stinson Jr. '22, Morris, Trimble, O. P. Alford '23, and Bigler, the squad was put through a strenuous workout, which included setting-up exercises, forward passing and a long signal drill.

Coach Roper preceded the session with a short speech, and Trainer Keene, Fitzpatrick had charge of the setting-up exercises.

The Princeton coach will have particular difficulty in building up a substantial line, for the loss of such stars as C. H. Treat '23, Dickerson, Alford, and H. F. Baker '23 leaves vacancies which will be hard to fill with the light and relatively inexperienced material on hand.

MAJ. F. H. BRIGGS IS

AGAIN PRESIDENT

With Maj. F. H. Briggs re-elected president and seven new clubs admitted to membership, the New England Association of the Amateur Athletic Union is looking forward to another successful season during the coming 12 months. The annual meeting of the association last night. The other officers elected were: Thomas Brady, vice-president J. F. Facey, secretary and treasurer, and F. K. McGrath, official handicapper, Maj. Briggs, W. C. Proutt, J. J. Magee, G. V. Brown, W. H. Cuddy, J. B. Maccabe and Bartholomew Sullivan were named delegates to the national convention at Detroit.

Entry List, Closing Oct. 8, Is Limited to Six Players—Hotel Pennsylvania Scene of Battle

NEW YORK, Sept. 18—Play for the third annual international 18.2 balkline billiard tournament for the professional championship of the world starts on Oct. 29 in Hotel Pennsylvania, this city. The tourney will continue through to Nov. 5, Entries for the championship tournament will close on Oct. 8 and all entries must be accompanied by an entrance fee of $250. The entry list has been limited to six players, the number that competed last year.

Although no changes have been made in the playing rules, one rather radical change has been made in the conditions governing the competitions for the dia-

NOTES The feature of the tournament held at Mahrisch Ostrau in Czechoslovakia, aside from Dr. Lasker winning first place without a loss, was the poor showing of Rubinstein, who finished tenth, with only two games won out of thirteen played. Rubinstein, however, had some consolation, in taking the first brilliancy prize for one of his wins, while the others went to Wolf, Bogoljubow, and Tarrasch, in the order named. The tabulated score:

(f) Beautiful as it forces black to play B-B, since otherwise white plays QxB.

(g) Forced again.

(h) Black can't afford to play Q-Q3 instead because 24 KR-Q by white would force black to lose a piece or the exchange, if he swapped Q's, or give up bis Q for white's rooks, which should also give white a winning game.

(i) Because white threatens KtxPch.

(j) White continues the game in the finest style of chess. He has a forced mate by Q-K4 or by Q-Kt2 if black take the B.

(k) J. Bernstein of New York, one of the B. (lt) J. Bernstein of New York, one of the contestants, says on this move: "How remarkable that Alekhine always finds the strongest move! All the masters were analyzing the position in the other room and nobody suggested the text move, which is certainly the strongest."

TRELAND RELEASES IRREGULARS DUBLIN, Sept. 4 (Special Corre-(a) So far the game has gone along familiar lines. On his next move Alekhine tries an interesting innovation.

(b) White gives up a pawn, but gets the start of his attack, which develops in a few moves into one of the finest attacking combinations seen at the tournament.

(c) Black's best: for if he took with the B, white plays BxP at once.

(d) Instead of text move, if black play 18... B-Q3, followed by P-K4 he would get a much better game according to Alekhine. Black wanted to maintain his B at B4 and so supported it.

(e) R-Qkit was black's only move.

Otto Kinkeldy Takes New Cornell Chair of Music Special from Monitor Bureau

To BUILD a philosophic foundation for music is a task awaiting American scholars, according to Otto Kinkeldey, who is giving up his post as chief of the music division of the New York Public Library to take the new chair of music at Cornell Universely. O BUILD a philosophic foundation ab resity. Meeting a representative of The Christian Science Monitor at his office in the Public Library, Professor Kinkeldey gave his views on the problem of musical esthetics, as it remains to be solved in the United States, and discussed certain aspects of musical discussed certain aspects of musical can do, others will be drawn. education in colleges. Professor Kinkeldey said:

We should possess a better grounded esthetic judgment of music than we have yet found, and we should study more deeply than we have been moved to hitherto into the connection between music and other activities. As an illustration of what I mean, a college music department should from the beginning teach the relation between music and physics. This work, I admit, has been well looked after in universities, but it has not engaged the attention of musicians. It has been left to acousticians.

Another branch that colleges should persons interested in folklore in general than by those primarily devoted to music. A more remote concern is the detection of talent. In Europe, they study these things as belonging to the art of music; and in America, we ought to take them up systematically. An eastern university might be named which has attempted a well-rounded scheme of musical cultivation, and a western college could be mentioned, too, which has achieved something better than one-sided results. But in many places the cause has made deplorable headway, proceeding under the flag of what is called musical appreciation. In some instances, the college has become but an adjunct to the surface of Verdi's "Aida" at a higher musical standard than he has ever achieved before.

Anne Roselle, soprapo, gave a blithesome study of the title rôle of the piece, disclosing much charm of tone and elegance of vocal style, if not always great impressiveness of dramatic characterization.

self successful if he has sent out graduates who boom him.

The trouble is that many college music departments have grown into conservatories, which is the wrong idea altogether. Conservatories have their place, but they deal with the training of performers. The colleges should investigate the profounder issues of music. They should be in a position to take it for granted that a student knows the elements of music, just as they are to assume that he knows grammar and spelling.

Strength in that high-note and long-held note equipment that wins the applause of the unthinking. He gave distinction, however, to the important trio of soprano, tenor and baritone in the Nile scene and really did more than any other single performer to hold the presentation as a whole up to a high mark.

Mario Basiola sang the baritone part as a man who has studied the best models and profited well by his observations. Natale Cervi was a king

But when I go so far as that, I ought to say that no basis for a philosophic judgment of music has yet been found anywhere. Great thinkers, like Darwin and Kant, have looked at the subject from the layman's viewpoint. Kant regarded music as a bother to people. He classified it as the most abstract of the arts. So we have no theory of beauty in respect to sound; and I do not see how we ever shall have, until many persons who know the field of music.

But when I go so far as that, I ought to sherry was a king with a voice to command effectually and Pietro de Blasi a priest with a voice to advise persuasively. Carlo Peroni, a director of the music, gave evidence of being an enthusiastic scholar in Italian opera. He had a good-sized, if not perfectly drilled, orchestra and an extraordinarily smooth and rich-toned stage band under his baton.

THEATRICAL NEWS THE WORLD

The Theories of Copeau

It is true that he aims at away from the conceptions of the Boulevard theaters. But the term "theater of the advance guard" has come to mean something narrow, something eccentric, something experimental, something daring and unconventional. It is not novelty for novelty's sake that M. Copeau seeks: line of tradition.

a languishing life after having exhausted its originality at the very beginning. The condition of success for 'theatre d'avant-garde' consists in rapidly losing its raison d'être. But the Vieux-Colombier is a work of con-tinuity and is multiple in the unity of the artistic aims pursued. I would have liked to open a school for comedians before founding a theater had I been able to proceed logically. But who would have listened to me had I proposed to found a school when I started in October, 1913? It has been said that M. Jacques Rouché, then Director of the Théâtre des Arts, had offered in 1910 to Edward Gordon Craig (who later installed at Florence school such as that opened at the Vieux-Colombier in 1921-1922), the technical direction of the Théâtre des The answer of Gordon Craig was that were he to accept he would insist on the Théâtre des Arts being closed for ten, perhaps 15 years, so that he would be able during that time closed for ten, perhaps 15 years, so that he would be able during that time to form pupils according to his own ideas of an entirely renovated art.

I have heard people say after the first act, of "Mary Rose," for instance, "I don't like him at all." And after ideas of an entirely renovated art.

"This folly, as it was called, I regarded as full of sense," said Mr. Copeau. "But, if I had tried to follow his counsel, I would have found no moral support, and no material suptheater were both born at the same time in my thought. And even today I believe I am the only man in France who conceives the theater as a center of studies, as a collaboration of all the human elements which can cooperate to the success of a play: an amicable collaboration, or better, an affectionate collaboration, which demands on the part of the comedian a which discipling an entire develope. mands on the part of the concertain which paved the way toward the strict discipline, an entire devotion to the representation of the work in concession of the license, as the total the form, the renunci-

What most displeases me is the 'disorderly inspiration,' the pretended genius which beasts of ignoring or despising rules. boasts of ignoring or despising rules, discipline, good sense, and good taste. The instinct in liberty does not appear

It was the same in Russia with valued by all the intelligentsia of Stanislawski. Antoine also modeled interpreters, but most of them were in his hands but a docile matter. He has stamped a whole period with his manner in the art of acting because he was himself a great and energetic personality. But he has not modified the actor in his essence.

"As for the great metteurs en scène abroad they have above all called upon works of the past to apply their theories. All these searchers (Tchekhoff, Max Reinhardt, Baer and others) are in accord on a double

London Cameos

By J. T. GREIN XVII-Leon Quartermaine

ONE of his admirers—and their name is legion—described Leon Quartermaine once as a "Dr. Faustus with a Mephistophelian touch." In the appreciative sense of the words, it was a wonderfully apt description. There is something of the savant and, in aspect at any rate, something eerie in Leon Quartermaine. He impresses at once, for great is his force of personality, but it takes some time to find him sym-pathetic. He shuns all tricks and all pose, he is just his earnest self and the second the same person exclaimed:

"Is he not wonderful?" That little casual critic was more acute than she, perhaps, meant to be. Quartermaine is one of those actors who does not conquer until he has "warmed to his port. I had first to exist. But the idea of the school and the idea of the school and the idea of the theater were both born at the same time in my thought. And even today I wont to declare during rehearsals "I shan't be able to do it." He recognizes that climax is the goal; he never lets himself go until the crucial scene ation of any kind of 'Cabotinage' and of any desire for personal success obtained at the expense of comrades or of the play."

Censor Bendan, who was in the nouse, saw at once the high morality as well as the artistic value of the banned play, left the audience in tremor and in silence. It was terrific and tragic "No, I am not the slave of a somber theatrical religion. I love beauty in all its forms. But it is true that I love order in beauty. That is why I have for the classical works a great respect which extends to the great foreign done. It was terrific and tragic in the classic meaning of the word. Nor was it theatrical; it moved as only human work can move us. That evening was his making; it cast into the shade all the fine work has been done.

The instinct in liberty does not appear to me to be better for the poet than for the interpreter. For it is not sufficient to wish to be sincere if one is not capable of being sincere. One has to be an artist in the true sense of the word."

Such are the statemens of M. Jacques Copeau on this interesting point, but he has lately dealt with another no less interesting matter in Comedia, which is the official organ of the French theatrical world. His views on the question whether there is a really new dramatic movement to be discerned at present may be summed up as follows:

"It does not seem to me possible to open the discerned at present may be summed to convey: "It give all I have, but oh! how much is there in it beyond my power." Were he an ordinary

He savors the meaning of the author's and it was difficult for me to get the always avoids the obvious. In his teatures molded as the effigy on an imperial coin of old Rome, there is something unfathomable. A searching, cogitating mentality lurks behind his serenity. It would seem as if he meant to convey: "It would seem as if he mean to convey: "It would seem as if he mean to convey: "I give all I have, but oh! how much is there in it beyond my power." Were he an ordinary tophelian touch-yes, that is it. I feel theatrical family. I think that in my up as follows:

GOLF has not often figured in the annals of diplomacy in the past, but a game of golf it was that finally brought

M. Poincaré's Opportunity

M. Poincaré into power eighteen months ago. The Cannes conference had been in session. M. Briand, Mr. Lloyd George and Signor Facta had once again been considering the apparently insoluble problem of making Germany pay reparations. An agreement had been reached, more promising, perhaps, than any which had preceded it because for the first time it proposed to cut the demands on Germany to a level which experts believed she could pay, while it gave to France a guarantee that Great Britain would come to her assistance in the event of unprovoked German aggression. The conference was only waiting for news of the confirmation of the agreement by the French Ministry, when a fatal impulse induced Mr. Lloyd George to invite M. Briand to pass the time by playing a game of golf. Now Mr. Lloyd George is not a very accomplished player. He plays an average busy business man's game. But M. Briand had never played in his life, while the practice of sport, and especially of golf, has not as yet made any such headway among the politicians of France as it has among those of Great Britain and the United States. No sooner did the news reach Paris that M. Briand had been making what looked like a ridiculous exhibition of himself under the direction of Mr. Lloyd George, than the fat was in the fire. The lobbies of the Chamber were aflame, the press began to rage, and within a few hours the Council of Ministers, under the presidency of M. Millerand, had rejected the agreement, and M. Briand was hastening to Paris to be told that he no longer had the confidence of Parliament.

Of course it was not primarily the game of golf itself which unseated M. Briand. French public opinion had for some time been becoming increasingly restive on two counts. On the one hand it had felt that, despite all the conferences and ultimatums of the Supreme Council, France was getting no nearer to that permanent security or that substantial reparation to which she felt herself entitled. On the other hand it had felt that her leaders had again and again been induced to sacrifice the demands of France to the desire to maintain the entente with England, and that, as the process had produced neither reparations nor security, France might do better to strike out on a line of her own. Whether or not the Cannes agreement might have secured the support of France if it had been more dispassionately considered, and whether if it had been adopted by the two countries it would have solved the reparations and security problems, no one will ever determine. The news from Cannes was that a fresh compromise had been made involving some further whittling down of France's claims and that M. Briand had been made to play golf by Mr. Lloyd George. In the tense condition of French public opinion the combination irresistibly suggested that the Wizard from Wales had put it across M. Briand again, and the decision was taken immediately to put M. Poincaré in power.

In consequence, M. Poincaré has always had two ends in view. He has been just as much concerned to keep France's initiative in Europe free from the restraint of Great Britain, as he has been to bring into effect a policy of vigorous coercion against Germany. That is why he steadily thwarted Mr. Lloyd George at Genoa, and why he almost welcomed Mr. Bonar Law's refusal to co-operate in occupying the Ruhr, so that France might occupy it by herself. For the moment, M. Poincaré and the policy for which he stands are completely victorious. He has got rid of the restraining influence of Great Britain, which he has practically forced back to her ancient policy of isolation, and he has brought about the abject surrender of Germany, which is now ready to agree to any settlement which will maintain her unity intact. But in achieving victory he is now going to have his policy brought to the real test. The critics of M. Poincaré have been of two schools. Some have maintained that he has never been really concerned with a settlement, but that his real object has been the partition and ruin of Germany. The others have held that he has been so obsessed with the rights of France that he has lost all sense of the practical and is bent on trying to force Germany to do what it is not within her power to do. We shall see in a few days whether M. Poincaré or his critics are right. Germany has apparently surrendered. Great Britain has manifestly stood aside. What kind of terms is M. Poincaré going to impose? On the answer will the future of Europe and the world for some years depend. If, having won his victory, M. Poincaré shows moderation and offers a settlement which it is practicable for Germany to fulfill, and which, therefore, does settle the reparation question, we shall all have occasion to be grateful to him. If, on the other hand, he proposes what is unjust or impossible, he will only make confusion worse confounded, for he will drive Germany to chaos and then in all probability to the determination to free herself from the domination of France in a new war of liberation. Truly, the opportunity that lies before M. Poincaré is great, but so, also, is the responsibility.

Ir is a matter of question whether Dr. Henry Neumann. a speaker at the sixth annual conference of state normal schools, which convened recently at Bridgewater, Mass., was jus-The "Subway tified in the critical attitude he assumed toward "the younger Manners" of generation," simply because it the Younger did not come up to his fancied Generation ideal of courtesy. There is always the question of perspective to remember. The older folk of several decades ago were full of complaints regarding the lack of certain characteristics in the youngsters of that day, which they themselves felt were so necessary to a proper expression of culture. And yet, if an inquirer had at that time gone back to a still further generation, he would have found that the very ones who were demanding their own standards of chivalry from the younger people were themselves held blameworthy in this respect when they were of the "younger generation."

Just so today, then, to their elders, the younger ones seem beyond measure deficient in certain qualities or mental traits which they themselves consider so necessary to a rounded individuality. Dr. Neumann actually declared that the "subway manners" of the younger generation are "typical of the time," adding, "if bad taste could be eliminated, respect could be taught for the old." And yet what do we find below the surface? That the younger generation on the whole is fully as willing to help and to love its neighbor as almost anyone of the older folk.

There is great danger today of looking too much upon the outside of things. The citizen of a foreign country visits a neighboring nation, and because he does not understand the customs of its inhabitants, immediately concludes the people are inferior in their habits of thought and general methods of living to the denizens his own home land. And yet at heart they may be every bit as kindly and as good as these latter, if they are but understood. There is no essential lack of courtesy in the younger generation. There is, perhaps, a changing idealism, a different sense of things from that entertained by the elder folk, and one which demands its proper appreciation. But to brand the entire younger generation with the stigma of inherent discourtesy, simply because some members of it do not seem to come up to the fanciful standards of certain self-constituted critics among their elders, is an unwise and an unsafe procedure.

IT DOES not require extraordinary discernment to appreciate the value of the work being done in many of the prisons of the United States by the American Library Association. That there is no reason why a convict should not be permitted, and even encouraged, to read and study, instead of brooding over his real or imaginary wrongs, would seem to be a foregone conclusion, and yet until comparatively recently, but little effort has been made to give those incarcerated in prisons any opportunity for such activity. It has seemed to be thought that as soon as any individual was confined within the walls of a jail, it immediately became the duty of most of those with whom he came in contact to render his life as miserable as possible, and to fill it full of reminders of his past mis-

The library movement has done much to mitigate all this. As the display in Boston shown in connection with the meeting of the American Prison Association indicates, the influence of good books is being appreciated more and more. It is also being found that many of the problems which have in the past proved almost insuperable to prison authorities are solving themselves when the prisoners under their care are allowed to occupy their thoughts with good reading matter and spend their time in improving their opportunities. Actually at the Sherborn Reformatory for Women at Framingham, Mass., is a library, among the shelves of which the women are allowed to roam freely, picking up the books which appeal to them and sitting around and reading them. It is true that this is the only prison in which such complete liberty is allowed, but the mere fact that its success has been demonstrated in one institution carries with it strong evidence that the plan employed there could be utilized in other places equally satisfactory.

One thing is certain in connection with all such movements, which have for their primary purpose the upbuilding of those who have for one reason or another been unfortunate enough to be confined within a prison. and that is that no good comes from a brutal adherence to methods dating back to the Middle Ages. It may be granted that there are some criminals who seem not to be amenable to kindness and who resent every effort made to help them stand on their own feet, but these are comparatively few. Far more in number are the men and women who respond to every effort made to bring them aid and who show by their actions that the confidence reposed in them is not misplaced. When it is realized that the influence of thought upon the individual's welfare is beyond measure powerful for good or ill, the work of this library association in turning the thought of imprisoned men and women into healthy channels is seen to be invaluable.

As EVERYONE knows, it is frequently made to appear that statesmen and the incumbents of high governmental offices have been misquoted. Many of these servants of the public insist that it should not be permitted to quote them directly. But it may appear, despite subsequent denials, that Col. George Harvey, who returned a few days ago to his post as American Ambassador at the Court of St. James's.

has been correctly quoted when he is made to say, in answer to a request to discuss the present political situation in the United States, "I am not a politician." The correspondent whose dispatch gave an account of the arrival of the Ambassador at Southampton evidently took the precaution to fortify himself and his statement by announcing, incidentally, that Colonel Harvey was accompanied at the time by his friend and guest, Will H. Hays, former Postmaster-General in the Cabinet of President Harding: It is not stated that Mr. Hays overheard the Ambassador's naïve plea in avoidance. It would have been interesting if the account had indicated the apparent reaction of the guest to the astounding declaration.

Assuming the momentary sincerity of Colonel Harvey's disclaimer, one-wonders just how he would have regarded, in the days before his "reformation," the same allegation if made by another. The gentleman has long been acclaimed by admiring friends and denounced by unkind critics in the United States as a politician par excellence. One would have been no more surprised to have seen David Bennett Hill's famous "I am a Democrat" distorted into the expression "I am not a Democrat," than to read, as a direct quotation from the lips of George Harvey, the astounding words, "I am not a

No indictment stands against politicians as a class. Despite the fact that among them there have been, and are, those whom one aspiring to the classification of "statesman" might not voluntarily choose as associates or confidants, politicians, merely as such, are not contemptuously or even suspiciously regarded. One can be a politician without being a statesman, it is true, but one can hardly be a statesman without being a politician in the higher and better sense of that term. Certainly the Ambassador does not intend to have it understood that he does not aspire to the classification of statesman. Possibly he would find it as difficult to convince his admirers that he is not a statesman as to persuade his intimates that he is

The dignified and cautious envoy of one great democracy to the ambassadorial court of another great friendly democracy must needs learn, first of all, the important lesson which teaches circumspection. Otherwise he has foreordained his mission to failure. Colonel Harvey is presumed to have learned this lesson. It is surprising to those who know him best that he so unconsciously confuses a quaint humor with the astuteness and circumspection of formal diplomacy.

Nor all the collateral members of the Smith family in New England were expected to attend the reunion of the Smiths held in a Massachusetts city recently, although the invitation was to everyone of that name within the territory defined. There were many who did attend-so many, in fact, that the wisdom of those responsible for sending out the call for the meeting in limiting its scope was proved. A family of less numerical strength might have included in the invitation all the members thereof in the United States, or even in the world. Not so the Smiths. Perhaps not a single community would have failed to qualify for representation, for no city or town or countryside is without those who bear that name.

The

Smith Family.

Since Colonial days the name of Smith in America has been one to conjure with. From the time of the John of that earlier period to that of the man who has been twice elected Governor of the State of New York, the pages of the record of the Republic's progress have been marked with the more or less romantic story of the accomplishments of the Smith family. Among them there have been many lawmakers in state and national legislatures, judges, preachers, doctors, scholars, writers and politicians. No section, state or city has monopolized the Smiths. They have sought no exclusiveness, no special favors.

It has been said so often that it is accepted as a truism, almost, that there is safety in numbers. One is inclined to suspect that the Smiths have often been convinced of this. It might be discouraging to one bearing a less common or familiar surname to find, in his effort to trace the careers of his ancestors even during the comparatively brief period since the American Revolution, that some of those whom he had been taught to regard as oracles had not always followed in the path of rectitude. The descendants of those who may have been accused of displaying a lack of regard for the title claimed by the owner of a horse, a cargo of merchandise, or a railroad, should delve cautiously if they claim a monopoly upon the family

How happy, in contrast, the lot of the Smiths! Their name is legion, and the collateral branches of the family often bear not the remotest relationship. Those who seek to establish, among their forbears, a line of patriots. or lawyers, or ministers, or what not, may with assurance eliminate from his lists all the Smiths, if any, who do not meet the prescribed requirements. The Smiths, because of this, if for no other reason, are to be con-

Editorial Notes

THE picture Kipling once drew of a mighty aerial traffic flashing through the night has lapsed from thought since the war. The other day, however, as if to recall it, a nocturnal visitant appeared over the city of New York, the illuminated wings of his plane glowing like the eyes of a monstrous owl. High above the kaleidoscopic incandescents of the Great White Way, this ardent sky pilot carved his fiery course, leading his twin comets, chained and docile, thrice across the city. Each time, in passing, his lights blinked their message of power, and then he disappeared into the velvety reaches of the night. No emblem marked his purpose, no signals save three nods. But many of the crowds of onlookers saw in it a vision of what is to come.

ONE hears much today concerning what the League of Nations has accomplished and what it has not, and also concerning what it can accomplish and what it cannot. There is, however, one service which it undoubtedly could render to Europe and the world in general, which, indeed, it seems, as an impartial international referee. peculiarly fitted to perform, and yet which appears practically to be ignored. Might it not, that is, make immediate inquiry into the question whether or not Germany is an honest debtor, furnishing the world with its considered opinion? The deliberate judgment of the League would go far toward affording satisfaction on this point to her creditor nations, including even France.

A First Night in Camp

ONLY a stone's throw away, the Hudson River steamers churn past on their way to Albany, with all lights lit. The passengers give never a thought to the little bush-encircled camp where those who have left a year of city life behind them that morning are at ease, with tent raised, camp-fire burning, bacon frying, and the small noises of the night beginning all about. Hills that meet the Catskills lie behind the camp, bushes to right and left shut it off from the river meadows on either side, and right before, as a sort of watery front yard, flows on the wide, unbroken surface of the Hudson, carrying down glints of starlight as it goes, bound for New York City, far away, and the Atlantic Ocean.

How hard it is to turn in on such a night, even beneath the protection of the precious tent which is the proud possession of the city dwellers, coveted long when displayed in a sporting-goods store window, and now for the first time spread out, clean and unwrinkled, as a shelter from the great outdoor night that has sunk down.

The world seems strangely silent here to those who have slept in comfortable beds under ceilings for eleven months past. The wide river, from far shore to near, flows noiselessly. The ear, accustomed to city rumblings, finds the unmurmuring night almost oppressive. A frog's croak makes the silence to those by the red embers only the more intense. Then comes the twitter of a sleepy bird somewhere near at hand, followed by a cricket's chirp. Another cricket joins in. Gradually the repetition of many small notes forces itself upon the attention of the listeners. Many a cricket, near and far, it appears, is at its singing. The night is full of sound. Once recognized. the cricket orchestra takes on an exaggerated loudness, yet it is all comradely and cheerful. It has been going on all this time, but the ears that have been dulled to nature's noises for months are only just beginning to be attuned to it.

Far across the expanse of river one sees the outline of the opposite shore, half a mile away, perhaps. Fifteen feet from the tent the water begins. It is dark water close to the bank, as it is for most of its reach across, but near the other side is a long, glassy stretch. Night-flying birds wing over it, calling with thin, high notes. On the other side trains run by now and then, north and south. Sometimes the string of lights of half a dozen tiny cars can be seen at once, with the glare of the engine thrown up on the under side of the smoke-trail.

 *  Night deepens its shadows and the stars magnify their radiance till they are as startling to unaccustomed campers as the cricket's noise. A bat zigzags overhead. The campers' talk begins. It is free of all man's city conventions. It is easy, simple and self-revealing. At last, with only a piece of canvas between the boughs of the bed and the ground, they turn in to tented slumber, and the little clearing is left to the crickets' orchestra.

Those who stir in the night may see through the tent-flap the great steamer pass quietly up the river to Albany, or hear the cough and sputter of the river boat as it comes in view around the bend with its two barges, panting regularly, till out of sight again. Huckleberry Finn knew such scenes, and looked out at slumbering out-of-doors from such a resting place on the Island of Contentment that Mark Twain described. The imagination of many a boy or man has carried him there, to lie beside Tom Sawyer, watching the starillumined Mississippi. Huck and Tom, no doubt, knew the sound of crickets and squeaking bats, the monotonous chug of river-craft, the chirp of disturbed nestlings, and the wonder of the unwalled night. They never saw train lights moving far off on the other shore, nor followed the engine's progress by the fiery trail of smoke rising from behind distant trees.

Night fades at last, and dark turns to gray, and the east vellows. One of the campers wakes, and in silence gazes out at the preparations going on for the gorgeous sunrise-drama. He hears, with chin rest ing on palms, the rejoicing of birds, and through the triangular tent-flap notes the mist eddies rising from the river as though a thousand teakettles were boiling down beneath. The world is cool and fresh. The hirds have finished their sunrise paran even before the red rim emerges from the trees across the water. These hard-working birds. he reflects, will be up to their wing-feathers in the serious matters of the day long before man's day has even begun.

Each grass leaf is tipped with dew, the taller blades bend with the weight of many diamonds; the stars pale out, a humming bird flits in the new light from stalk to stalk of purple fireweed; the little Ford, dripping with dew, waits patiently for tents to be folded once more upon its runningboard. A scow goes by close to shore, with the skipper shaving on the deck. Now is the time for campers to be up and doing. dawn is over, breakfast calls-the first September night under canvas is ended.

Two Outlaws Reinstated

Split infinitives and sentences ending with a prepositiontwo ancient outlaws of the English language much exploited by teachers of elementary grammar and dabblers at writing have come, at last, into their own. Havelock Ellis, in no less a magazine than the London Mercury, declares, and we are cheered by his words: "One thinks, for instance, of that solemn warning against the enormity of the split infinitive which has done so much to aggravate the pharisaism of the bad writers who scrupulously avoid it. This superstition seems to have had its origin in a false analogy with Latin, in which the infinitive is never split for the good reason that it is impossible to split. In the greater freedom of English it is possible and has been done for at least the last five hundred years by the greatest masters of English; only the good writer never uses this form helplessly and involuntarily, but with a definite object, and that is the only rule to observe. An absolute prohibition in this matter is the mark of those who are too ignorant, or else too unintelligent, to recognize a usage which is of the essence of English speech. It may be as well to point that it is the amateur literary grammarian and not the expert who is at fault in these matters. The attitude of the expert-as in C. T. Onions, 'Advanced English Syntax'-is entirely reasonable

"One may perhaps refer, again, to those who lay down that every sentence must end on a significant word, never on a preposition, and who reprobate what has been technically termed the posthabited prefix. They are the same worthy and would-be old-fashioned people who think that a piece of music must always end monotonously on a banging chord. Only here they have not, any more than in music, even the virtue-if such it be-of old fashion, for the final so-called preposition is in the genius of the English language and associated with the Scandinavian-in the wider ancient sense Danish-strain of English, one of the finest strains it owns, imparting much of the plastic force which renders it flexible, the element which helped to save it from the strait-laced tendency of Anglo-Saxon and the awkward formality of Latin and French influence."
